

Editor's Picks*Jimmy Lewis aka Jimmy Rider*1. Moto 911 Pain-Relieving Spray

I get my fair share of bumps and bruises, and I hate feeling them all the time. One little squirt (actually the second application about 30 minutes later is even better) and I can ride like I don't ache. For $8.95 for a one-ounce bottle, it's better living through chemicals!
www.moto911med.com

2. Any Rear Trials Tire

The brand isn't as important as the sticky rubber and soft sidewalls. Trials tires are (and were) secret weapons on the trail. They last a long time and don't tear up the trails, all the time while looking goofy. That is until you putt-putt right past Mr. Tire Spinner.

3. Acerbis 6.6-Gallon Tank

Really long rides in remote places are challenging and rewarding. But not without gas. Acerbis makes this possible, affordable at $249.95 and belt-on simple.
www.acerbis.com

4. BRP Hand Guard Mounts for Fasst Co. Flex Bars

I'm pretty particular with my handlebar setup. Fasst Co. bars are my favorite, but attaching plastic wraparound hand guards used to be impossible. BRP fixed my problem with its $49.95 billet-aluminum specialty mounts.
www.brpit.com

5. The DB Snorkel

As much as two-strokes are already pretty quiet, there's nothing like making them almost silent. It looks goofy (like a trials tire), but it makes my stroker a stealth fighter without power loss for only $85.
www.thedbsnorkel.com

